HANDLING OSTRICHES.

"Of all the mean things to handle, an ostrich is the worst," said I. C. Scott at the Plangintonhouse. "A friend of mine has an ostrich ranch down near Albuquerque, N. M., and though he is making money with his birds he has his troubles as well. The only way in which you can do anything with an ostrich is to cover up his head. Then you can lead him wherever you want to. For that purpose the farmers have a hood which is drawn over the head so that the ostrich cannot see and then they are changed around as you may want them, but woe to you if they happen to get the hood off while you are transferring them. If that happens you can look for trouble in solid chunks.

"My friend told me of an experience of that kind which one of his hands had. The fellow was a young German who could speak little English, but he was a willing worker and for that reason a favorite on the ranch. One day it was necessary to transfer one of the old birds to another farm some miles away. The bird was cornered after some trouble and the hood slipped over his head and fastened. Then a rope was tied about his body and neck and the German was told to take him over to the other place. Everything went well for a time, but in some way the ostrich managed to get the hood off. The German did not know what this meant and therefore made no attempt before the hood was off to see that it was securely fastened. He soon found out, however what it meant. As soon as Mr. Ostrich got his bearings he started. The German held on to the rope pluckily, and the way he traveled was a sight. He only hit the high places, the remainder of the time he was up in a balloon. It happened that some of the men on the ranch saw the fracas and came hurrying to his assistance, but before they reached him he had let go the rope and when they came up he was nursing a choice lot of bruises. 'Ach Gott,' he said, 'I never race mit an ostrich again,' and he didn't. Not again could they ever get him to lead an ostrich, even if he had a blanket over his head.

"But there is money in the birds. Their eggs sell from $1 to $5 each, for there is quite a demand for ostrich eggs, both by breeders and shows, which like to have them in the collection, and then the zoos about the country buy them. There are several ostrich farms out West. Besides the one at Albuquerque there is one at San Jose and another at Los Angeles."

HE FELT HONORED.

During the last season a traveler in the South stopped in a small town to make a purchase. The storekeeper could not make the correct change for the bill which was presented, so the traveler started in search of someone who could. Sitting beside the door whittling, was an old colored man to whom he asked "Can you change a $10?" The old fellow looked up in surprise, then he touched his cap and replied: "Deed, an' Ah can't, boss, but Ah 'preciate de honor, jest de same."

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING.

One pound of raisins, stored; one pound of suet, chopped fine; three-fourths pound of bread crumbs; one-fourth pound of flour, one pound of currents, cleaned and washed and dried; one-fourth pound of brown sugar, five eggs, one-half nutmeg, grated; one-half pint of brandy, grated rind of one lemon, one-half pound of minced candied orange peel. Mix all the ingredients together, beat the eggs, add to the brandy, and pour over the dry ingredients, mixing thoroughly. Boil in a greased mold six hours. Boil six hours again at the time of using. Serve with hard or brandy sauce.

There is no plant in Kentucky better prepared to turn out original and up to date printing than we are, and we will be glad to quote you prices and show you samples at any and all times.

RIGHT KIND OF ADVERTISING.

Not long since in a western town of some 7,000 population the merchants had an illustration of what can be done by judiciously advertising. The proprietor of a clothing and dry goods store decided that he would add a grocery department. This was met with the disapproval of other merchants in the town, particularly the grocers. They combined and commenced an advertising campaign directed chiefly against him. Small space was used. They were greatly surprised one morning to find that the object of their attention had in the daily paper a four-page advertisement. They were further surprised when the weeklies of the surrounding towns came out with one and two-page advertisements offering wonderful bargains and to pay the railroad fare of those who would purchase a certain amount of goods. For miles around the town large posters announced the great sale. Other merchants of the town looked upon the venture as foolish, and predicted that there was something wrong, a failure or a fire in sight. Neither happened, but in two weeks' time the enterprising storekeeper, who advertised to sell 25 pounds of granulated sugar for a dollar, when the jobbing price was more than five dollars a hundred, provided the purchaser ordered other goods, did a business amounting to more than $16,000, or as much as the average small storekeeper does in a year. Not alone that, but he is still doing the biggest business in the town. He advertised rightly.

Winning His Wager.

A tall, herculean Gascon astride a wretched pony encountered, as he rode over a bridge a richly dressed cavalier mounted on a noble steed. Saluting the horseman, the Gascon said to him:

"I will bet you ten golden pieces that I can do with my horse what you can't with yours."

"Done," said the cavalier, whereupon the Gascon dismounted from his miserable hack and, taking it up in his arms, threw it over the battlements into the river, thus winning his wager, to the great discomfort of the owner of the noble steed.—London Mail.

AN INSTRUMENT OF REVENGE.

It was close on midnight and the professional guest felt it was high time for him to stop playing. "Perhaps I'd better not play any more to-night," he said, wearily. "I see you have near neighbors, and they might be annoyed."

"You needn't mind that for a minute," said his hostess, earnestly. "We are perfectly sure they poisoned our cat, and if they did, nothing is too bad for them."—Youth's Companion.

Still Wondering.

Worn out by a long series of appalling French exercises, wherein the blunders were as the sands of the sea, a hapless high school mistress declared her intention of writing to Florence's mother.

Florence looked her teacher in the face. "Ma will be awfully angry," quoth she.

"I am afraid she will, but it is my duty to write to her, Florence."

"I don't know," said Florence doubtfully. "You see, mother always does my French for me."

The teacher is wondering whether she will write.—London Express.

HOME-MADE REMEDIES.

To cure a cough take one-third pint of whole flaxseed and pour over it a quart of boiling water, let stand on back of stove, where it will just simmer for two hours, then add the juice of two lemons and a pint of granulated sugar set over the fire, let come to a boil, then strain and cool. Take a tablespoonful several times a day.

When you feel that you are taking cold try this: Take a cupful of boiling milk and add a half teaspoonful of ginger. Drink before retiring.

If the bowels are constipated take 1/4 grain of calomel and soda every hour until you have six pellets, or a grain and a half of calomel. If you wish to go to bed at 9 o'clock, begin taking the pellets at 3 o'clock. In the morning take a selditz powder before breakfast. There is no surer way of getting rid of cold than by thoroughly cleansing the bowels. Nothing starts the liver like broken doses of calomel.

The juice of a half a lemon in one-half glass of water and one-half teaspoonful of soda will relieve sick headache.
